KEN'S CORNER

BY KEN
HACKATHORN

It has been noted that IDPA shooters often tend to wear a uniform; that is, 5.11 pants and, most often, the 5.11 concealment vest. Since IDPA puts heavy interest in concealment shooting in many of our matches, it is natural to seek out the gear that serves this process best. To say that the other forms of action shooting don't follow the "uniform" rule would be an understatement; some other action shooting disciplines have sponsored shooters wearing outfits that a pro-bowler would refuse to wear. Regardless of the issues of which concealment garment works best, the vest has become king of IDPA use.

The 5.11 vest has become wildly popular for both everyday concealment use as well as for IDPA use. Sadly, the design of the 5.11 vest has never been right in that access to the pockets for easy drop in function of tactical magazine changes is compromised by the design. Something as simple as putting your car keys in the side pocket is a hassle. For some time now I have recommend Cabela's Safari Vest, at $49.95, as one of the best designs for concealed carry use.

Just recently, Woolrich introduced a line of tactical oriented clothing under their "Elite" clothing line. These products are of exceptional quality, well designed and priced very competitively to existing products. I have been using the vest marketed under the Woolrich "Elite" line and find it much better in function for the concealed carry application.

Easy access pockets on both the right and left front make this vest much better for IDPA use, plus the Woolrich "Elite" vest is made of heavier material than other popular vests, making it is easier to sweep out of the way in a concealed draw. The only negative about the "Elite" series of clothes is that they may be a bit heavy duty for warm weather wear. It is my understanding that a warm weather version or tropical line of tactical concealment clothes from Woolrich "Elite" is soon to appear. If you like the professional look and feel of the current 5.11 line of clothing, check out the Woolrich "Elite" product line. See the expanded Pro Shop in this issue of Tactical Journal.

It was with some interest that I recently discussed the change of attitudes that IDPA has brought to the action shooting world. First, IDPA never made any attempt to apologize for its "defensive" shooting application of handguns. We never tried to convince anyone that all we do is shoot handguns as a means of precise, fast and fancy paper punches. IDPA is about letting people compete with handguns designed to shoot BAD GUYS...All we shoot at is cardboard IDPA silhouettes and steel plates, but everyone understands that this is based upon using a handgun as a "tool", not a toy.

As IDPA founding member L.A. Vickers also accurately noted, until IDPA came along, the prevailing attitude was that in order to be really good with a pistol in competition you had to shoot some form of 1911 pistol. It was argued that the 1911 was simply the best pistol to shoot for the best results in action shooting competition. Well, we now see some pretty amazing performances with DA pistols via SSP division competitors. In many cases we have seen SSP competitors out perform CDP (M1911) shooters in top competition. As a result, we have seen handgun manufactures provide a whole new line of handguns tricked out for IDPA shooting that are of the SSP design. I can remember the era when anyone using a DA auto like the Beretta M92, S&W M5906, Sig 226, CZ75, or HK USP would have been considered clueless in any hopes of being competitive with a M1911 shooter... Today this is anything but the norm, and often not only do they hold the line with the 1911 crowd, but all too often kick their butts. Thank IDPA for this change of mindset.

There was a time not so long ago that anyone coming to a shooting event and drawing and shooting from concealment was considered highly suspect. Add to that the idea that drawing a handgun from under a jacket or vest was considered a serious handicap for being competitive. The idea of having the handgun out of sight and not in view of the range officer was just not done... Now, with IDPA, it is not only accepted, but the norm.

Better concealed carry rigs are now marketed and better systems for carrying concealed have become part of many garment product lines such as 5.11 and Woolrich "Elite". It is my opinion that IDPA made concealed carry shooting skills dramatically better than they have ever been. For decades, only a handful of professionals knew the best techniques and skills needed to draw and shoot well from concealment. Now, it is mainstream, as nearly all active IDPA competitors have mastered the skills that only hard core "gunmen" have known for decades.

In so many ways the Vickers Scoring system used by IDPA has proven that fast, accurate shooting is the key to good performance both in the "real world" and in matches. Other long established scoring systems have for ages rewarded speed over accuracy. The ability to deliver fast "accurate" shots is the key to neutralizing a target, both in real life and on the range. IDPA made this scoring system work and has proven that even mortals can learn to hit with fast, accurate shots – if you practice and train with those goals in mind.

I often hear members of other shooting disciplines refer to IDPA as standing for "I don't practice anymore". Come to any IDPA sanctioned event, pay your money and shoot - then tell me that IDPA shooters can't shoot well. Good shooters are good shooters regardless of what discipline they compete in. Look at the big names in IDPA and note that, not only do they measure up with other action shooting disciplines, but they often do extremely well regardless of if it is IDPA or another popular handgun shooting game. Good shooting is good shooting... The rules may be different, but aligning the gun with the target and pressing the trigger straight to the rear – quickly – is simply the skill that all good handgun shooters strive for.

Shoot straight - and fast. Be Safe.

Good shooters are good shooters regardless of what discipline they compete in.

How do you top 15 Major Matches

By Kurt Glick

From humble beginnings, Middle Tennessee Shooters Club in Manchester Tennessee has grown to host 15 major IDPA matches. It all started back in 1998 when the club hosted its first major IDPA match, The Tennessee State Championship. The Southern Regional Championship was soon to follow in 1999. The club has continued to host these matches each year bringing to 15 the total number of major matches held. These matches have been very successful in garnering very positive feedback from shooters. The high percentage of repeat shooters is testimony to the quality of the matches. The club has been host to international teams including Venezuela, Slovenia, and Italy. Celebrity shooters such as country music stars Irlene Mandrell and Aaron Tippin, and champion shooters Matt Burkett, Dave Sevigny and Julie Goloski have been participants in the matches.

How do you top that? Building on the experience of 15 major matches Middle Tennessee Shooters is reaching for the next level. On August 5 – 6, 2006 the club is hosting “The Summer Sizzler”. This major-major match, if you will, will feature 20 stages and up to 400 rounds. The club will offer enough shooting to make the event attractive to those traveling long distances. While shooters have traveled across several neighboring states to attend the Tennessee matches in the past, “The Summer Sizzler” is intended to be a national draw for shooters.

Tennessee is well positioned for a match intended to be of national interest. The Middle Tennessee Shooters Range is located north of Manchester Tennessee only 2 miles off I-24. Air travel to Nashville is very reasonable from everywhere in the United States and Manchester is just about an hour drive from Nashville International Airport. Middle Tennessee is an easy drive for most of the eastern United States.

The match was intentionally scheduled during a gap between other announced major matches and before the IDPA National Championship. Shooters will have the opportunity to size-up the competition from across the country before the Nationals in late September. The two-day format will also be an excellent opportunity for shooters to tune up for the upcoming Nationals. There is a whole new dynamic involved in being mentally and physically prepared for two consecutive days of shooting. Currently there are few opportunities for shooters to prepare for this aspect of competition prior to the National Championship.

Cost for the two-day event is $100, which includes lunch on both days. The match will have a late start time on Saturday to allow for travel that morning and will finish early enough on Sunday for convenient return travel. A hospitality room will be offered on both Friday and Saturday night during the event. Several sponsors have signed-on for prize table donations including i-Shot, Digilight, and Ready Tactical Products. Participant application, Safety Officer application, accommodation information, and general event information can be found by visiting the clubs’ website www.midttnshooters.com.

2006 Smith & Wesson IDPA Winter Championship

by Robert Ray, A05118

It's cold up there, very cold. The people that put on the Smith & Wesson Winter Championship have the cure for that. One great, heart pumping, pulse racing, adrenalin dumping good time. The match comes around every year in February and if you have not made it, you are missing out on one of the best matches in the country.

The people at S&W have had a lot of practice putting on a major match. This year was the 9th Annual Smith & Wesson 2006 IDPA Winter Championship. As this is the 10th anniversary year for IDPA, they have been putting on matches since the very beginning. From the challenging and realistic courses of fire, the wonderful food, the chance to shoot S&W guns and the opportunity for a little Q and A session with a world renowned revolver shooter, everything that they do is first class.

I flew into Hartford, CT and, after picking up the rental, a short drive up the interstate found me at the Smith & Wesson Shooting Sports Center in Springfield, MA. The range is easy to find and after confirming that I could find it in the morning, I headed off to the hotel. After checking in, I ran into some shooters from down around North Carolina. We proceeded to do what shooters are best at; trading bull. After a few hours of that, I was relaxed and felt I was ready for the next day.

I was wrong. Very wrong. I got up feeling good; I got to the range feeling good. I even felt good when I pulled the trigger the first time. After that things started going down hill. I was not properly prepared for this match. The stages were great... I was just not great in them. If you wanted to do well in this match you really needed to be on top of your game. This is one of the most challenging matches that I

In the history of practical shooting, no one has finished on top more than Rob Leatham. But if you want to come close, you can start where he does — with a Loaded Series Springfield Armory 1911. have ever shot. I saw a post on one of the internet forums that said there should have been fire extinguishers on each bay because of all the crashing and burning. But it was great. I had a fantastic time burning and everyone that I talked to had a great time regardless if they were doing well or not.

The SO's and staff did a wonderful job of putting together the stages of fire. They were challenging and the props were just plain awesome: Stages 1 and 2 were on Bay 1. They were home invasion based scenarios with paneled walls with pictures, windows and curtains, a bed, kitchen table, recliners, a TV and more. You shot through doorways, windows, hallways and at a variety of static, bobbing and swinging targets.

Stage 3 was called Deliverance and it was just unbelievable. You started kneeling next to a canoe holding its rope and a paddle. On signal you moved to cover behind a wood pile while engaging a "dog" and other threats. You then moved to the shed past the whisky still and engaged more threats inside the shack. The lighting on this stage was not low, but it was reduced.

Stage 4, 5 and 6 were on Bay 3 and consisted of: stage 4 was tactical sequence on 6 targets in a shallow V formation. Oh yeah, all you had were head shots and it was limited Vickers. Stage 5 included dragging your gun out of a box; mags or speedloaders out of a bag; and then loading and shooting 4 targets, 3 times each. Last, but not least, stage 6 was a twist on the poker table scenario using a mover. All of these stages were also what I would call reduced lighting. A number of people let those head shots get to them and went down in flames, including yours truly.

Stage 7 was shot in a very dark room using a flashlight on one string and nothing on the next. Add non-threats and a swinger and that really makes it tough.

The designer for Stage 8 is just warped. Imagine sitting in a boat and shooting 3 steel plates then 6 threat targets while avoiding the 3 non-threats. Now imagine doing that in the dark with a flashlight (because the non-threats change for every shooter) and a motor that caused the boat to rock constantly. Tough, very tough, but a blast to shoot and if you did the math you realized that there was at least one reload for everybody. Glad I wasn't shooting a revolver.

On Stage 9 you were a delivery driver for Fed-Up. You started seated in a mocked up, life size delivery truck that included front windows, emergency flashers and a back end full of packages. On signal you moved to the doorway setting off a swinger and shooting down the side of the truck. Then a tight shot out the back window and last, another swinger and targets out the passenger side door.

Stage 10 was a bank holdup where you started with 6 rounds in your gun and engaged 2 targets with 3 each, moved to a door and picked up a fallen guard's gun (M&P40) and engaged 3 more targets.

Stage 11 had three strings. First, you shot a couple of targets out of the cab of a truck. String 2, you engaged 2 targets from low cover at the rear of the truck and string 3 was 2 more targets from around a barricade. All of this was shot from low light.

There is really so much more to the courses than what I have put down here. Unfortunately, I just do not have the space to go on. It would take all day. I will just say again, it was very challenging and I had a blast shooting them.

My thanks again for the SO's hard work and to the match director for such great stages and letting me shoot with you guys.

The rest of the week was filled with more shooting and more fun things to do. Thursday night, dinner was brought into the range for those who shot or were there to sign in. When you signed in, each shooter received a great iShot bag, a long sleeve shirt, a coffee mug and a cool little S&W pocket knife. That evening S&W also provided you the opportunity to shoot their new products including the M&P40 pistol and rifle, the .500 Magnum, the .460XVP and several others. Cor-Bon provided the ammo. After you got your fill shooting, you could sit down in a question and answer seminar with Jerry Miculek.

Friday was more shooting and if you were not doing that, then you could take the opportunity to tour the S&W plant. The tour is a real eye opener and a great way to see the past and future of this historic company. If you like history then Friday was the day for you. Besides the tour of the S&W plant, there was a cocktail party at the historic Springfield Armory. Great food and drinks combined with the chance to get a behind the scenes look at American history; what could be better? The weapons on display at the Armory were just spectacular.

Saturday was the last day of shoot-done.

I know that I mentioned it earlier but I feel I have to say it again. There is so much more to this match than what I have been able to convey to you in this article. I could write more on all of the great things that went on there but I only have so much room. If you want to see some great video of this match, watch Jim Scoutten's Shooting USA later this year. They were there taping most of the match and I know that it will be a great episode.

I would like to thank the management of Smith & Wesson, Paul Pluff, Peg Cowell, Pete Goloski, Tom Gorden and all of the men and women that worked so hard to make this match successful. It was a wonderful match and I had a really great time. I hope that I will be able to return next year. If you can make the match, it would be one of the best matches you shoot all year. A word of warning though, this match filled up in just 3 days.

IDPA

Sport...Training...or Both

I have been shooting in IDPA matches for about 5 years now on a regular basis. In that time I have noticed that there are 3 general types of people at every match. You have the serious sporting type that are there to win and will analyze every stage before they shoot to determine every possible angle and means to give them the edge they need to win. Then you have those that compete against themselves and are out to simply become better shooters and maybe win their division now and again. Then you have the ones who see IDPA as a chance to get in some target practice while having a good time and meeting up with their buddies. None of these types are right, wrong or better than the others. It is simply a matter of each person having a different perspective on what they want to achieve. But there are two overriding factors in each and every match, regardless of your personal reason for being there: IDPA provides good training with good friends.

I personally always knew in the back of my mind that IDPA matches were a good source of training but I have never dwelled on the fact. Most of us only see classes dedicated to training, such as Thunder Ranch, true sources of training (something I have never personally done). But training is about repetition, muscle memory and doing the right thing enough times so that when your brain stops working reflexes take over and get the job done. IDPA does just that and we are normally not even aware that it is happening. Well, in a recent match this concept was driven home to me in a manner I never wish to repeat. Although it is very embarrassing now, I am going to tell you this story in the hopes that you will see the value of IDPA as a training tool.

One of the first rules you learn when handling firearms is that you never point a gun at anything you do not intend to kill. One of the first IDPA lessons you learn is that when you engage multiple targets, your eyes move to the next target first followed by your body then your gun. These two things kept a very bad mistake from becoming a fatal mistake. Knowing this, here is what happened as I can recall it now. We had a stage where you engaged two targets while retreating then had to rotate 180 degrees to your right (downrange) and engage T3 while retreating. Sound simple enough? I thought so too. First two targets I engaged, no problem. My eyes began moving to my third target and my left foot started moving my body when I caught sight of a living breathing person. Fear does not begin to describe the feeling that raced through my body. I was getting ready to point my gun at a target I had no intention of even seeing, never mind killing. My blood ran cold, my legs gave out beneath me and I thought I was going to toss my cookies. I had never experienced seeing a person while I was handling a loaded gun and it scared the living daylights out of me. But this is the important part, as I made eye contact with this person, I thankfully can still call my friend, my brain shut down from fear but the training kicked in. In a split second that I can not even recall, my finger came off the trigger and outside the trigger guard and I rotated 100+ degrees to my right facing straight back down range before my legs gave out beneath me. The reality of what I had almost done had me shaking so hard I had to get the safety officer to take my gun and make it safe (thank you Rodney). All I could think was that I almost shot a friend of mine because of a stupid mistake.

Now I bet you are saying, OK I can see the training in this but what do good friends have to do with it? Well, the range officer and match director got me off the berm to a picnic table to sit down. In my mind, all I could think was I almost shot someone. I have no business carrying or handling a gun. All I could see was what almost happened and the guilt was tearing me up. Robert, Gary, Sandy, Tony and Tim (the friend my eyes saw first) all stood by while I shook from head to toe with guilt, fear and whatever word you can find that could come close to describing how I was feeling at that moment. Each of them reminded me that what could have happened didn't because I did the right thing. My gun never made it to the position my eyes did. My friend was never in danger because my training kicked in and I reacted correctly even though my brain completely short-circuited. What is most important is what did happen NOT what could have happened. I kept my gun safe and stopped the motion of my body as soon as I recognized the error. If I had still been new to this sport I could easily see that shock of seeing a person causing me to jerk and possibly pull the trigger putting countless innocent bystanders at risk. I am so grateful that all that safety stuff, which seems to get annoying, was drilled into my head because I know nothing else was working up there at that moment.

At this point, about an hour after the fact, I am starting to feel a little better. The shake is settling down and it dawns on me, if this had been a real life situation and I had this reaction at seeing a live person in my sights, how could I possibly defend myself? Would my gun become a weapon against me because I do not have what it takes to point a gun at a human being? Friends to the rescue again. They were there to remind me that my reaction was to having my gun drawn with the expectation of shooting at a piece of paper and seeing, instead, a human being. If this were real I would have had the human being in my sights first and made the conscious decision that I needed to defend my life or the life of another before the gun ever left my holster. A different situation all together. My training was good (thanks to IDPA). My friends were there to support me (thank you all). My reaction was correct. Terrifying, but correct none the less.

This was a lesson I never care to repeat but thanks to the support of my friends I can see the positive that has come from it. I have been to the range since then and those first couple magazines I still shook like a child coming out of a haunted house but I have gotten back on that horse. I will never take for granted the training that I receive from IDPA at each and every match I go to. I will never pick on the SO's for their never-ending safety babble that you get so tired of hearing. That repetition is what caused me to react in a safe manner during a very big mistake. The training I received from IPDA kept my mistake from being potentially deadly and the support of my friends kept me from hanging up my gun. Life for me will never be the same and I do not expect you to understand that unless you have faced a similar situation. I have more respect now for those in the armed forces that protect our freedoms and have actually had to look in the eyes of a person and pull the trigger. I know what seeing a person in your sights feels like and it is not good, to have to follow through must be unbearably difficult. If you take nothing else from my experience please remember to respect your firearm for the tool that it is and take your training (in any form that it may come) seriously. If you are sloppy and careless in your training when your brain shuts down you will be sloppy and careless in your reflexive actions and that could be a costly mistake.

The Tactical Advantage

By: Robert Ray

Smith & Wesson M&P40

I just want to start this article by saying that I shoot single stack 1911's mostly... sometimes a Kahr, but it's still a single stack. I guess I have something against double stack guns. They have just never felt quite right in my hand. That's just me. But now I find that I have to re-adjust my thinking. There is a new player in the double stack market and I think I'm just going to have to buy one. I think you are going to want one too.

The Smith & Wesson M&P has a long and well respected history. Built in 1899, the original .38 M&P revolver (now known as the Model 10) has seen service all over the world. In some places it is still in service today. I think that the new M&P40 will provide that same multi-generational service.

The M&P40 is a black Zytel polymer framed gun with a stainless steel slide/barrel and structural components. The slide and barrel are finished in a black Melonite® with a surface hardness of 68HRc. You can also spell that as “tough”. The rear sight is a steel Novak® Lo-Mount Carry with a steel ramp dovetail front sight. Tritium night sights are also available. The gun holds 15+1 .40S&W rounds and is listed at 24.25 oz empty with no mag. All of that is a great start but now we are getting to where the M&P really starts to come alive.

The M&P comes standard with (3) interchangeable palmswell grip sizes.

This innovative feature means no more settling for a gun that feels close to what you want in your hand. Now you have the option of changing the palmswell to make the gun fit your grip, rather than trying to change your grip to fit the gun. Most shooters will agree that how comfortable the gun feels in your hand is one of the most important aspects of choosing a weapon for carry or competition. The next is reliability. The M&P also has that in spades. The gun that we used for this article now has 500 rounds through it and not one single malfunction of any kind. That number is for the gun straight out of the box and has not been cleaned yet. I want to add that almost all of those rounds are match rounds which means a little dirtier, dustier, tougher environment than just static line shooting, (more on that in a moment).

All of that combined with an ambidextrous slide stop, a reversible mag catch, a loaded chamber indicator, a universal light rail and the ability to disassemble the gun with out pressing the trigger, makes for an impressive package.

OK, so now you have all that info but what does it mean? I mean really, you could have gotten most of that off of the S&W website. Well, remember that I said that most of the rounds through the gun were match rounds. That's because I received the M&P40 right before the Mountain Valley Regional IDPA match. Up till this point, I had only put a couple of rounds through one at the S&W indoor match in February. Not much time to get used to a gun with a totally different trigger from my 1911.

I received the gun on Tuesday. I fired my first 50 rounds on Thursday and another 50 on Friday. Saturday, I shot the match. From the moment I picked it up, the gun performed flawlessly. I wish I could say the same for myself. The only malfunctions that I have had were in my head, but that is not really that unusual. I was 57 points down for the match and half of that was on one stage because I put two on each target instead of the required three. That cost me 2 places. I still came in 7th out of 16. I count that as good considering that I only received the gun 4 days before the match.

The overall contours of the grip made the gun feel very comfortable in the hand and very natural feeling. It started out pointing slightly high but barely enough to notice. After a small amount of draw work it was dead on. I found after a little experimenting that the mid-sized palm-swell worked best for me. The controls were well laid out and easy to find under match conditions. The slide catch was easy to locate but a little difficult to drop the slide on a slide lock reload. Part of that I can attribute to being used to the more ledge like slide release on my 1911. The magazine release was easy to use and quickly ejected the empty mag from the gun when pressed. Mag changes were very easy and fast. I shoot mostly single stack guns with and without mag wells but reloading that double stack was a dream. That opening looks like a train tunnel and seems to just suck the mag right into it.

The rear sight was nicely rounded off, providing for a smooth, snag free draw from under a vest. The three dot sight arrangement was clear and fast to pick up. Target acquisition was likewise fast and made for quick transitions between targets. The gun is balanced well and that also helps make for fast target transitions. I used Chris Stewart's Ready Tactical products and they made for a very clean draw and reload. I was very happy with presentation out of the holster. Again, the gun came naturally into my hand and required very little change for me from my 1911.

took a little concentration on my part to keep them both in the zero. When I let that concentration slide a little, my shots opened up. The fact that it took so little concentration on the difference between what I am used to and the M&P was very impressive.

I have since shot a local club match and my performance has continued to improve, even

The only thing that took a little getting used to was the feel of the trigger. The trigger is two stage with about 5/8' of take up followed by a 1/4 inch of smooth pressure till the shot broke. This made for a nice 6.5 pound trigger pull. It felt pretty good out of the box but way different from what I am used to. When I first started working with live ammo, I found myself pulling my second shot on a double tap low. On day two, I was able to close most of them up into the zero. It though I still have not done any practicing with the gun. After I shot, I traded gear with last year's national match director, John May, and we reshot the match. Till then, John had never fired the M&P and he went on to do really well with it (read as "kicked my behind"). After shooting, John commented on how easy it was to shoot and how comfortable it felt in his hand. I have let a number of other people shoot a few rounds through it after the matches and all of them have had similar good things to say.

I highly recommend taking a look at one of these guns. I think that you will be just as impressed with them as I was. I think this will be the hot new gun for Stock Service Pistol Division. Ready Tactical Products

You may have noticed that I mentioned that the holster and gear I was using came from Chris Stewart's Ready Tactical Products. After getting the gun coming this way and deciding that I wanted to shoot it in a match, the next thing I knew I needed would be gear. Nowadays, when I think of kydex holsters, I think Ready Tac.

Chris is one of the best guys that you will ever meet and he builds great products. His line covers all of the most common models out there; Glocks, Sigs, revolvers and 1911 variants. They also come in a variety of cants and colors. He also makes them for you lefties out there. He also has a specially designed holster to fit the ladies. One of the many great things about Chris is he will custom bend a holster for anybody. If you have something a little odd or hard to find a holster for, call Chris. In this case, the M&P is so new that a lot of holster makers are just now getting their product on line for it. I called Chris up and next thing I knew the holster was here in my hand.

The holster I used is a straight drop right side belt model with matching mag pouches. It has a clean look and fits tight to the body. It also retains a gun very well without sacrificing draw speed. The front edge of the holster has a molded in sight track that helps make for a drag free draw. The back edge is secured with two Chicago great choice for concealed carry or competition. The same great qualities I have mentioned about the holsters also apply to his mag pouches.

Just one more thing about Chris; I mentioned he is a great guy and I want to leave you with an example of the kind of person he is. At last year's Nationals, there were a number of people that showed up with illegal holsters. As those people were found, they were told to change holsters or they were done. It was amazing the number that had a legal holster in their bag, but there were quite a few that did not.

Chris had a table at the screws that allow you to adjust the tension on the gun. I found mine to be perfect straight from Chris, but you have the choice of changing it. The screws are also covered for a cleaner snag free look and feel. Because it's kydex, reholstering is a snap and I mean that. When you holster your gun you can almost feel it "snapping" into place. That security of knowing the gun is going to stay where you put it and the ease of draw makes Ready Tactical products a match and the match director sent them up to see him. Chris could have sold them a new holster; he didn't. He asked to see what they had. When presented with the competitors holster 99% of the time he was able to say "I can fix that". A little work (sometimes a lot) with a heat gun and it was fixed. When asked "what do I owe you" Chris always said "Nothing, have a great match". I don't know about you but that is the kind of person I want to do business with.
